The Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center (CMS), widely recognized as the world's leading international chamber music organization, brings international, inter-generational ensembles of superb chamber music players to cities around the world as part of its extensive touring program. This concert treats audiences to classics from the 18th through the 20th centuries, performed by some of the world's best chamber music artists. The ensemble brings together the extraordinary British flute player Adam Walker, who appears as soloist regularly with UK orchestras and beyond; oboist James Austin Smith, called "virtuosic" and "dazzling" by The New York Times; veteran clarinetist David Shifrin, one of today's most in-demand artists as a soloist, recitalist and chamber music collaborator, and former Artistic Director of CMS; bassoonist Marc Goldberg, who served as principal bassoonist with the Festival Orchestra of Lincoln Center; and the internationally renowned Czech-born French horn player Radek Baborak. Anne-Marie McDermott, praised for her "daring, exquisite playing" (The Philadelphia Inquirer), is at the piano. CMS's touring program presents 80 concerts this season around the globe, creating important opportunities for our artists to connect with audiences world-wide.
