

Now Hiring: Student Roles in Sustainability

Are you interested in getting involved in campus sustainability? This Fall, we're offering two PEAK student positions that allow you to directly impact our campus' sustainability efforts.

The Sustainable Food Systems Coordinator will collaborate with the Institute for Applied Sustainability to improve SOU's food systems, strengthening the relationship between our campus farm, dining services, and sustainability reporting team.

The Student Sustainability Coordinator will partner with the Sustainability Office to support sustainability operations across campus. This role provides opportunities to contribute to broader initiatives that weave together environmental, economic, and social justice principles across campus.

In either position, you'll gain hands-on experience in project implementation, data management, and outreach, all while increasing your understanding of sustainability. Both positions offer a platform for leadership, collaboration, real-world problem-solving and ample opportunities for personal and professional development.

No need to be a sustainability major—these roles are open to all students passionate about creating positive change, regardless of your field of study. We welcome diverse perspectives and encourage students from every discipline to apply!
