

At the Intersections of Traditions

In this course, we will study how contemporary Native American writers negotiate between Indigenous forms, such as spiritual cosmological traditions and the oral tradition and the structural forms of western literary genres. In addition, this course will also look at how the various texts grapple with history, identity, and survivance.